What's new:

The Warlock of Firetop Mountain is a fantasy novel by English author Ursula K. Le Guin, first published in hardcover in 1976 by

Houghton Mifflin and in paperback by Penguin Books (USA) in 1987. It is a novel about two wizards/sorcerers who work for a crown in a fantasy world. The novel is about the ethical issues explored by the wizards in their professional lives as well as the personal efforts they make to address those issues. Plot summary Nine-year-old Thewele and his orphaned twin sister, Ilemma, arrive in a strange land with no memory of their past. When they are found by the tribal god, Kag Baranaj, he shelters Thewele and Ilemma, introduces them to a number of important "Shadows" (a select group of adults who have certain communal rights), then leaves them alone together. Thewele and Ilemma explore their new home, learning the ways of the Usu, the tribe of their new home. Thewele soon learns the story of how he and his sister are related: once, long ago, in the egg nest of a great horned owl who was reborn as a great dark bird. Thewele's sister is his brother's daughter. The two of them hatch before the shadow Kag Baranaj had invited into the nest, a great dark bird hatching cock. Baranaj believes the sky is laughing at him and so entrusts Kag and his brother-in-law Manan, along with the two eggs, to Kag's wife, Likana, and two of her women for safekeeping. Likana did not want to hatch them, but Kag insists that if the sky disapproves they will be safe in her care. After opening the eggs, they hatch into chicks and Kag and Manan decide to keep them as a pets. When Likana discovers they are cocks and not chicks, she is enraged and hurls them down a cliff. Meanwhile, the shadow Kag had invited into the nest, a peaceful old man named Melot, is chosen by the people of the Usu to be their god, representing the first time a shadow has been chosen by the people to take the Moon Horse form into the sky. Manan succeeds Kag as leader of the tribe. When Kag and Melot come back to the Usu later with the hatching chicks, Manan orders Kag to lead the descent
