If you want to use a modern version of IDA (Instruction Decoding Assistant) then you'd better try CodePeer, an IDA plugin which replaces the run time interpretation of decodes with an immediate snapshot of what an instruction does. It's less than 1 MB of code, and the author is happy to discuss the code here. Homepage: CodePeer Description: CodePeer is a simple C-like subset of Python that compiles and executes directly. For ARM processors it's very fast, and it uses command line options for pre-processing and optimization. It requires Python 2.7 or later, but it's easy to integrate into your build system. Homepage: Decimations is a Python library for decoding and verifying Dwarf Fortress blocks and DFRAWs. It's maintained on the Dwarf Therapist Wiki and the author always welcomes suggestions or feedback. Homepage: Donate to the Programmers' Pension Plan: If you'd like to help the developers of this project with some money, here's a way to do it. If you like what you see, decide to make a small donation, get a t-shirt, then write about it. Such things might turn out to be very helpful.The last of the four ground-ball heavy, right-handed batsmen to do the same thing in the Big Bash, he remains a constant in almost every match and is as pure as water to his mates. He says: "I have not (thought about it), I'm still enjoying it." "I wasn't really sure what it was going to be like at times," Richardson told The Age. "It's hard when it's your 20th game of the summer but now it's just another game on the team sheet. I'm enjoying every moment." Richardson even ruled out the possibility of taking the field against a left-arm spinner or an opening bowler during the Big Bash and is ready to play in any position. "The main thing is you can play your natural game which is basically getting the ball in the gap and hitting with your right foot to the off-side," he said. "Whatever, wherever you get the ball in the right place, it's going to give you a chance of scoring, that's where we've got it down." Two-time Indian Premier League champions, the Kings XI, are keen on keeping
