Chad Felton, 33, was sentenced on Thursday after pleading guilty to felony charges, including battery on an officer, domestic violence and corporal injury to a spouse, and misdemeanor counts of battery on a person, shoplifting and false imprisonment. According to court records, Felton and his wife got into an argument over a game of pool on Oct. 10, 2014, when she accused him of stealing her $30. The argument escalated and ended with the victim leaving the bar with her then-husband. Felton later punched the victim in the face and head while she was with her husband. When officers arrived, they tried to intervene in the dispute. The incident was captured on surveillance video. In it, Felton is seen punching the victim several times in the head. While officers restrained Felton, the victim told officers that she suffered a cut lip, a cut on her cheek and some bruises. Felton was arrested in February for stealing two bottles of water. The theft was captured on surveillance video, according to Long Beach Police Department records. Felton was on felony probation at the time of the recent incidents. He is being held at the Long Beach jail and is scheduled to be released on May 10. Eric Ting is a San Francisco Chronicle staff writer. Email: eting@sfchronicle.com Twitter: @EricTingQ: 2edc1e01e8
